Why You Should Buy Your Diamond Engagement Ring From Silverscape Designs

Silverscape Designs, the valley's foremost jewelry gallery has maintained a tradition of excellence since 1976. The philosophy which guides our stores is that all jewelry must be made from the finest precious materials, designed for beauty and durability, set with the finest gems, and accurately represented. Our philosophy and commitment to excellence is your greatest assurance that anything you buy from Silverscape Designs will represent true value and provide maximum satisfaction. The benefits of buying your diamond at Silverscape include:

IDEAL CUTTING: Ideal cutting means cutting a diamond for maximum beauty and brilliance rather than maximum weight. Only one out of every thousand diamonds cut in the world today achieves the exacting standards of Ideal cut Lazare diamonds. Your choice of an Ideal cut Lazare diamond gives you the maximum combination of brilliance, dispersion (rainbow colors), and scintillation (sparkle)... a lifetime of extraordinary beauty.

DIAMOND HALLMARK: All of Silverscape Designs Ideal cut diamonds come with a unique form of identification: a laser inscribed registry number on the girdle (outside edge) of the gem, which positively identifies the diamond and authenticates your ownership. This registry number called a hallmark, is just four microns high, and is only visible under magnification. Not only is the owner registered in Silverscapes' permanent records, the quality grades (cut, color, clarity and carat weight) are also listed in Lazares diamond registry in New York City.

FINEST DIAMOND SETTINGS: A Silverscape diamond solitaire mounting starts with the part that holds the diamond, called the head, die struck repeatedly, using 50,000 to 80,000 pounds of pressure. The result is the most secure, durable head made. Many of the designs available also have die struck shanks (the band that encircles the finger). The twenty-five tons of pressure used squeezes out all of the air bubbles, and densely packs the atoms of gold. The finished piece provides unsurpassed detailing, polish, and durability, suitable for the most beautiful ideal cut Lazare diamonds.

DIAMOND LAB: One of the benefits of purchasing your diamond from Silverscape Design is the assurance that your diamond has been weighed by international standards, and the quality grading checked and verified by a certified by a graduate gemologist. By acquiring our diamonds unset, we can guarantee that the grading is exact. Every Silverscape Ideal cut diamond is chosen from hundreds after microscopic examination to ensure the best quality and value.

SILVERSCAPE DESIGNS full service custom design and repair facility is visible from our showroom. The standards of our master goldsmiths make the security and esthetics of the setting their foremost concern. Few people realize that, at the moment a properly weighed prong is pushed over the edge of a diamond, over forty-five pounds of pressure is exerted on that diamond. Careful preparations are required to ensure that the precious metal on which the diamond rests is perfectly smooth and properly supports the diamond. In addition to our own lab and studio, we provide the expert design and fabrication services of two-hundred goldsmiths from throughout the country, many of whom have won international design awards.

SILVERSCAPE DESIGNS diamond prices are real. We maintain a consistent, conservative pricing policy, using GIA grading terms, that allow you to shop with the "real price" on every piece of jewelry in our galleries. Items are priced according to their true value- we never have huge discounts, because are prices are not inflated to allow for these types of sales techniques. Our customers tell us that they enjoy shopping in our store where quality and value are foremost, and informed service is provided- 365 days of the year. When non-Ideal cut discount and "sale" diamonds are accurately graded for CUT, COLOR, and CLARITY, and ACCURATELY WEIGHED for their carat weight, their "savings" often not only vanish when compared to an Ideal cut Lazare diamond, but may be priced higher than the Ideal Cut.

AT SILVERSCAPE DESIGNS, we have always found that when customers have the facts, they make informed decisions which results in the higher level of satisfaction in their purchase. Our entire staff is committed to taking any amount of time necessary to answer your questions and give you the background information required to make a decision concerning gems and jewelry, and to properly care for your purchase. If you're thinking of buying a diamond, we invite you to stop in for a consultation.

Spatial Design Systems was started in October of 1993 by two Babson College seniors and a woodworker from Northampton. The three founders spent a year designing a line of products specifically for college students and recent graduates. All of the products had to meet three stringent criteria: they had to be built to last, they had to be nicer than what was on the market and they had to be affordable. After a year of development, Spatial Design Systems is proud to offer you their products.

Our Loft Systems are second to none. Each component is a free standing piece that can be used separately when you leave your dorm room. The five foot models are high enough to sit beneath comfortably at your desk, the four foot models are ideal for placing a Trifold beneath for extra seating or a spare bed for guests. The three foot models can be used to store those items that currently clutter your room. All are constructed of solid oak and maple to ensure years of service.

To order, call us at the number below, or stop in at Off The Shelf (ph. 535-3074) at the Village Commons in South Hadley (directly across from Mt. Holyoke) to view our products.

...THERE'S FIRE

The smoke-free debate heats up in Northampton

"Your industry is not our concern."

— John T. Joyce, Chairman, Board of Public Health, to local restaurant owners and members of the Northampton Hospitality Association Inc.

It was one of those infamous lines that will forever be remembered — forever remembered, forever misunderstood.

I think it's safe to assume Chairman Joyce meant to say, "Our concern is protecting public health, not running the restaurant industry," which would have been a fitting retort to Eastside Grill owner Danny Yacuzzo's assertion, "You don't know our industry and you are trying to tell us how to run our industry." But this was one of those times when your hands are tied too tightly behind your back to pry your foot out of your mouth. Mr. Joyce's remark provided an opening for all the Northampton restaurateurs and Hospitality Association members to vent their collective disgust: Well there you go! Now you've said it! That's what this is all about! In this small and humid hearing room on the second floor of Northampton's City Hall, frustration and mistrust roamed freely on the air like smoke in a bar. Well, at least like smoke used to roam around in a bar. Although the dissenters finally earned a 60-day reprieve from the imminent Northampton smoking ban, the end result has not changed. In two months the dust will settle and the City of Northampton will be smoke-free.

The occasion was an eleventh-hour "workshop" sponsored by the Northampton Board of Public Health (BPH) on August 30 to address the concerns of local restaurant and tavern owners regarding the smoking ban that was to have been implemented September 1. But this particular hearing didn't seem like a workshop — it was more like a war.

UNDER FIRE

As it has in so many American cities, smoking has come under attack in Northampton. And while the city's Board of Health wants to set a healthy example for its neighbors (many of whom — Holyoke, Easthampton, Chicopee — already have bans in place), its Hospitality Association would like to see another kind of example set. The result: restaurateurs-turned-civil libertarians squaring off against harried half-time BPH members and well-studied, state-funded anti-tobacco activists. None of the enemies seem altogether comfortable with the roles. The tavern and restaurant owners just want business as usual; the activists want to do battle with the tobacco industry, not their neighbors; and the BPH (besides wanting to be able go out for dinner in this town again) just wants to save restaurant employees and customers from the ills of secondhand smoke. But fight they must. With two months to organize and plan, debate and delay, the issue that was all but settled has gotten a new lease on life.

It's been a tough year for smokers. This country has witnessed the embarrassing display put on by tobacco industry suits who sat face-to-face with an inimical team of congressmen and denied, under oath, that they believe cigarette smoking causes cancer. Without a doubt, the smoker has become the cultural pariah of the decade. Nudged out of the workplace, banned from innumerable air flights, the smokers get less money for their used cars and pay more money for health and life insurance. Massachusetts smokers have had to fork over another twenty-five cents for every pack they purchase (that's an additional $91.25 a year for the pack-a-day smoker). And what about those little children pleading with their parents in recorded announcements over the airwaves: "Please Daddy, stop smoking." You can't turn on your radio, turn on your television, or open a newspaper without being force-fed an anti-smoking campaign. Smoking's a dirty habit, but is it really as bad as all that?

Pam Schwartz, coordinator of the Tobacco Free Hampshire County Coalition. "When you have a public health issue, you regulate."

COUGH SUPPRESSANTS

435,000 Americans die each year from smoking-related diseases — that's more annual deaths than accidents, fires, suicides, alcohol, cocaine, heroin and AIDS combined. The Environmental Protection Agency says that secondhand smoke is the cause of 3,800 lung cancer deaths annually and is linked to increasing children's risk of bronchitis, pneumonia, asthma, and middle ear and lung infections. It is estimated by the Massachusetts Department of Public Health that 11,000 Massachusetts residents die each year from tobacco-related illnesses. Those are the facts.

BY LOU COVE

But we've heard all that before, haven't we? We all know that smoking is bad for you, no matter what those guys from Phillip-Morris think. Most who are opposed to the ban feel their rights are being denied. They'll take their chances with the Grim Reaper — it's their private, personal business, isn't it?

Perhaps. But what about the $1.5 billion taxpayers spend in this state alone on medical services and lost productivity as a result of smoking-related illness? Pass the hat around, because that works out to be $250 for every woman, man and child in the state of Massachusetts. Suddenly, it's not so private an issue. Moreover, the public cost is not just paid in dollars.

"This is a public health issue," says Pam Schwartz, coordinator of the Tobacco Free Hampshire County Coalition. "We're not talking about whether somebody can smoke in the privacy of their own home or their car. We're talking about affecting the public health of others. And when you have a public health issue, you regulate." Schwartz likens the ban to similar U.S. restrictions on asbestos in our schools. "Asbestos is a Class A carcinogen," says Schwartz. "So is tobacco. There is no safe level."

As one of the most visible and vocal supporters of the ban, Ms. Schwartz has had her hands full fending off a slew of angry business owners. Her strong assertion during the August 30 hearing that the BPH not delay the ban was met with tremendous opposition.

"1.5 billion dollars in Massachusetts — that's a business concern," she argued. "That means lost wages, lost jobs. The idea to postpone seems absurd." Her comments were met with more moans and groans from those assembled.

"How much do you get paid to say that?"

shouted Packard's owner Robert McGovern as Schwartz rattled off her list of relevant facts and figures. "I don't think that bleeding heart from [the Coalition] would be here if she didn't get paid," said McGovern after the meeting. But Schwartz's presence was an important one, because as far as the rest of the City of Northampton was concerned, the ban was a done deal. Aside from Schwartz (whose salary is drawn from the revenue earned from the 25 cent cigarette tax for education and prevention — that's right, smokers pay her salary) and James Bergman (executive director of Stop

Danny Yacuzzo in his opening statement to the Board. "We're willing to help."

But the Board isn't looking for help, they're looking for compliance, and that's where things get sticky. For many tavern owners and restaurateurs, taking away their right to allow smoking is tantamount to taking away their right to conduct business in the manner they see fit. For people like Bobby McGovern, it is perceived as a blatant violation of their rights as business owners. As a result, Mr. McGovern has hired counsel to represent him.

"I know, one way or another," said attorney at the hearing.

"Jake's is open from 11 p.m. to 3 a.m. on Friday and Saturday nights," said that establishment's owner, Daniel Workman. "That's a religious experience. At 2 a.m. these people don't care who's smoking and who's not. I don't know who I'm supposed to call when these people start smoking."

WHO'S HURTING WHO?

Fears that the ban is inappropriate and fascistic ran rampant at the August 30 hearing, and dissenters searched for an appropriate metaphor for the sense of violation they were all feeling. But comparisons to banning red meat and the like were not effective. The health risks posed by a char-broiled cheeseburger only affect the person who's doing the deed. Smoking is considered an entirely different beast.

Imagine you're sitting in a restaurant eating your glazed duck and sipping a Chianti you shouldn't be splurging on, when someone sits down at the table next to you and lights up some jasmine incense. Or maybe they're just burning sticks. Your senses are assaulted. Your meal is ruined. Would you call the manager and have them stopped? Most likely. How different, then, are smokers? There is little physical difference in the action, only cultural. Igniting tobacco and blowing smoke around a restaurant has long been accepted in this country, but burning anything else is prohibited.

The real fear comes down to that most common of all denominators: money. Will the businesses lose it and whose fault will it be? Will smokers take their business out of town just to keep smoking at the table, or will they adapt to the new restrictions? Northampton's Chamber of Commerce is concerned enough to have publicly opposed the majority of the BPH's regulations, but "Asbestos is a Class A carcinogen. So is tobacco. There is no safe level."

Teenage Addiction To Smoking or STAT), the hearing room was crammed with opponents to the ban. Supporters were at home expecting their weekend dinner on the town to be smoke-free.

NOT LYING DOWN

The Northampton ban was conceived as a measure to protect workers and patrons from the ill effects of secondhand smoke, or Environmental Tobacco Smoke (ETS) — preferred parlance in the lexicon of smoke warfare. An unofficial polling of the restaurant owners in attendance at the August 30 meeting found the majority to be non-smokers, sympathetic to the BPH's goal of reducing the damage incurred by cigarette smoking.

"There is no better educational venue than local restaurants," argued Eastside's ney Steven Winniman, McGovern's hired gun, "Bobby McGovern will challenge this ban if the city chooses to enforce it. He will not take this lying down."

Winniman's line of attack is direct and lawyerly, unlike the general emotional reaction and cries of violated civil rights from most of McGovern's peers. He believes that the BPH may have "overstepped its powers with a ban of this sort." Banning smoking in McGovern's restaurant and bar, for Winniman, has constitutional infringement written all over it. "It is a restriction on the use of his own property," says Winniman, "which amounts to a 'taking.'" He argues further that the BPH has, in effect, delegated police powers to the restaurateur. "Bobby McGovern has to police his own restaurant or he gets fined or closed down." That fear turned out to be a common one does support a ban on tobacco vending machines and the requirement that retailers who sell tobacco products pay a $25 annual permit fee. The business community clearly wants to comply with the spirit of the Board's action by helping in the effort to educate the community about the hazards of smoking while also working its way around to a voluntary ban on smoking, citing the 39 restaurants in Northampton that are already smoke-free.

But the Board delayed the implementation of its ban only for the purpose of clarifying the variance process, so the reprieve is not as satisfying as it might have been and tensions continue to run high.

The anxiety surrounding the potential loss of revenue is both very palpable and very real, but research should assuage some, if not all, of the concern. A study published in the American Journal of Public Health this July found that smoking ordinances had "no significant effect on the fraction of total retail sales that went to restaurants," and concluded that smoke-free restaurant ordinances do not adversely affect restaurant sales. The study, conducted between 1986 (1982 for Aspen) and 1993, included 15 cities in California and Colorado, as well as 15 control communities that had no such smoking ban.

Still, many are not moved by any study, statistic, or result. To them, it is freedom that is being restricted, not smoking. Whether or not they are successful in repealing the ban, the bitterness left in their mouths by this battle will not wash away any time soon.

"Without threatening," said Depot owner Chuck Bowles to the BPH, "there are those who would stand up for their rights and choose their own course of action. I would comply with your regulation, but I would hate it. And I would do whatever I could to see that you were never able to regulate me like that again." ★

JUST THE FACTS

- Nearly 435,000 Americans die every year from smoking-related diseases. That is more annual deaths than accidents, fires, suicides, alcohol, cocaine, heroin and AIDS combined.
- Every year 3,000 Americans die of lung cancer from secondhand smoke.
- 28% of Massachusetts residents are smokers.
- 11,000 Massachusetts residents die each year from tobacco-related illness.
- Massachusetts taxpayers pay $1.5 billion per year in medical expenses and lost productivity as a result of smoking-related illness.
- $2.17 would need to be added to every pack of cigarettes to cover the cost of treating smoking-related diseases and lost productivity.
- According to former U.S. Surgeon General C. Everett Koop, cigarette smoking is the leading preventable cause of death and disease in the nation today.
- The tobacco industry sells $1 billion worth of cigarettes to youth each year.

We Can't Just Leave it to Beaver Anymore

Author Laura Benkov chronicles the history, complexity and possibilities of Lesbian and Gay families
by Jill Rubinstein

What is a family, exactly? Ask any group of nine-year-olds today, and chances are the answers will be far more varied and specific than they were ten years ago. Boston psychologist and lesbian mother Laura Benkov explores that definition and more in her recent work, Reinventing the Family: The Emerging Story of Lesbian and Gay Parents. Remember when Carol and Mike Brady called a family meeting to deal with that tricky one-phone-for-six-kids-situation? If only it were that easy. Today, custody battles, issues around donor insemination, parenting roles and homophobia have all become part of the modern family's challenge. As the methods for addressing these issues unfold, resources like Reinventing the Family will undoubtedly become quite valuable.

TVO: Reinventing the family is a well-explored topic of conversation in the Pioneer Valley. What kind of significance do you think the book will have for people who have already done a good deal of research and thinking about this topic?

LB: I view [the book] as a social history. The book is certainly not a handbook or a how-to type of thing. What I tried to do is trace the recent history over the last two decades of gay and lesbian parenting. That's why it's called the emerging story, because I think it is a story that is very much in process. I think history really does help us define our struggles more, so I do very or who are lesbian and gay parents.

TVO: What kinds of tips for parents do you have for dealing with homophobia in school?

LB: Well, I have ideas, but I definitely made a decision not to write a book that was an advice or a how-to, but that was more of a social history, a chronicle. I was very interested in how different people handle things. So, that is the point of view from which I approach the whole issue of homophobia. I think we need to be reminded as a community, particularly in a place like Northampton where there is a well-developed gay and lesbian support system, that there are many people living in many parts of the country where that is not true. One of the things I think we need to have a dialogue about is the different paths people take in the community. I'll give you an example: I talked to [lesbian couples] who say they wouldn't choose to have a hyphenated last name for their child, and they wouldn't choose to have their child call them both Mommy, because they want their child to have the option of whether or not he or she comes out about his or her family structure.

I talked to people who articulate very important things about why they see it that way, about why coming out was a process and a choice, and that they want their child to have a chance to make his or her own choices. So, I think rather than setting it up as just a homophobic position or a fearful position, it is also the way the parents are articulating respect of the child. On the other hand, I have had parents say that's wrong because as a gay or lesbian parent you need to shape their world in such a way that you are modeling pride for them. I think there are some very valid points in that position, too. What I stress in the book is that they don't need to be polar opposites. As a community, we should continue the dialogue about the different values that we are trying to establish with our children and how do we do that in a homophobic world.

TVO: What kind of legal recourse do the non-biological parents have when gay and lesbians couples break up in terms of custody or visitation rights?

LB: Well, that's one of the really key issues of our time. For the most part, those cases have been very negative for the non-biological parent. There's a little bit of a shift occurring, but it's very little, and it depends on where you are. I think what's really up here is, are the courts going to acknowledge that parenting is not necessarily a matter of biological connection? There have been a few courts so far that have acknowledged the [the importance of the] psychological relationship [between parents and children]. Most of the cases where the courts have acknowledged that are cases in which the children have been older and the kids can articulate [the importance of the relationship] themselves.

TVO: You do end on a hopeful note in the book. Through all your research, did you get the sense that the definition of family was expanding?

LB: Yes and no. I'm cautiously optimistic. One interview I did in California was with

From The Seat Of Their Bikes, Part 2

Our intrepid Valley travelers, Meg Taylor and Penelope Voekel, have reached Michigan in this edition of their cross-country report. Apparently, they have succeeded in reaching that legendary, for-women-only event — the Michigan Women's Music Festival.

We have traveled from Toronto to Sarnia, then to Port Huron, Michigan. We call the Mason County Clerk's office on the pay phone at Denny's, next to the Buick dealership, to find out where the Michigan Women's Music Festival is. I [Meg] want to visit my girlfriend. "I never heard a that," is the answer, after several extension transfers, Michigan-style. "Wait a minute — if it's the one I think it is... well, it's heavily guarded."

"What do you mean? It's a music festival."

"Well, if it's the one I think... [grave sigh] it's a nudist camp."

I try too hard to conceal a full-on laugh. "Well, that's the speculation that's going about. I'm not really sure. But if it's the one I think it is, it's in Whiskey Crik."

"Whiskey Crik?"

"Yeah, south of Wallahalla."

"What's a crik?"

"Just take a left in Wallahalla until you see water," and he hung up.

Ninety miles later, in the middle of nowhere, we see breasts. Bare breasts. Over 600 pairs. And lots of processing. About ten times as much as at the Northampton Lesbian Festival. There were 7,000 women at this festival, but when we arrive, only the workers remain — the music is over.

The workers are divided into crews, and we meet the security crew first, who cannot let us on the breathtaking Land until we've been cleared to work on a crew the next day. So we sit around a security crew fire at Gate 5 and listen to the workers process about the tofu veggie dish and the bagel flavors until my girlfriend shows up. Fortunately, she's happy to see me.

These are the nooks and crannies of the Michigan Music Festival: love tents, the Belly Bowl, the Worker's Kitchen, the Cuntree Store, tattoos, bleached blonde streaks, sassy 13-year-olds, water lilies, cigarettes everywhere, and deep, dark woods. We spend the next day picking up trash, processing all the nudity and drinking beer — clothes on — with the workers we've met at the only country-western billiards bar for miles in this part of Michigan, Crystal Valley. Hundreds of dykes in the middle of nowhere; what a flirt fest. Wish I could have seen the music. Off to Minneapolis. ★

Profits to the Rescue

A unique economic partnership saves a local business and preserves community service

by Erica Habert

Community Enterprises, Inc., (CE), a human services organization that has provided housing, employment, and other support systems to people with disabilities since 1972, was faced with a two-headed beast — potential bankruptcy and the loss of invaluable service to the community. At the brink of extinction, a rescue team created an innovative business lifesaver: a for-profit business that exists solely to provide financial support to its non-profit parent organization.

"Our profits don't leave the area, and they may be helping your neighbor."

CE, with offices throughout Western Massachusetts and Connecticut, is funded primarily by state agencies such as the Departments of Mental Health and Retardation and state Vocational and Rehabilitation Agencies. But as their demand for services expanded and their financial support base didn't, CE was faced with a potential monetary crisis.

"It was the end of the prosperous '80s when there were huge budget cuts in human services funding," explains Andrea Callahan of CE's main office in Northampton. "As a non-profit organization, we began to ask — what can we do to survive? Our whole investment is providing human services to people with disabilities and we wouldn't have been able to continue our mission without adequate funding."

A group of CE personnel formed a committee, hired experts from the outside, and came up with an innovative way to ease the organization's fiscal concerns. "We needed to become more self-sufficient," says Callahan, "and one of the ways to do that was to create a for-profit business," to support their services. Months of tireless research and planning resulted in the formation of the Northampton-based Dependable Business Alternatives (DBA), a temporary and professional placement agency serving the general public.

Today, less than four years after its inception, DBA claims approximately 80 Western Massachusetts businesses as customers, boasts 300 registered temporaries available for placement, and contributes upwards of 12 percent of CE's total revenues. The choice to make the for-profit enterprise a temporary agency was a successful one, says DBA General Manager Ernie Whitney. According to Whitney, the temporary-employment industry is one of the ten fastest-growing industries in the U.S., with many of today's jobs stemming from short-term contracts and projects rather than from permanent positions.

However, fast growth of the industry isn't the only component Whitney considers to have contributed to DBA's success. There is also to DBA's unique mission as a for-profit enterprise. "One reason that we were able to establish ourselves so quickly and do so well is that we have a different message than the competition. We can tell employers, if you use our temporaries, the money is staying in the community. It's staying in the Pioneer Valley — exclusively — to support programs for people with disabilities. Our profits don't leave the area and they may be helping your neighbor."

The Key to Employee Retention

The fall season typically brings big business to the Valley, from foliage enthusiasts to approximately 30,000 returning students. For many employers, the population boom also means a change in the roster of employees. If you're hiring new staff, or if you plan to anytime soon, you might be interested to know the results of a recent survey on employee retention.

The survey, developed by Robert Half International [RHI], the world's first and largest staffing services firm, attempted to determine what the single most common reason is that employees leave a company. The results, gathered from 150 executives from the nation's 1,000 largest companies, revealed that a lack of praise and recognition is the number one reason. This factor accounted for 34 percent of the executives' responses, followed by compensation (29 percent), limited authority (13 percent), and personality conflicts (8 percent).

"Companies that believe money is an employee's sole motivation for working are destined to lose some of their best people," said Bob Half, founder of RHI and author of the book, Finding, Hiring, and Keeping the Best Employees. In addition to performance-based bonuses for employees, he said, managers should provide "informal rewards" such as hand-written notes and verbal praise. Half added that while monetary compensation is important, it is "most effective when an employee can see a direct relationship to his or her performance."

Jeff Newman, RHI's area manager for Connecticut, noted that managers can also reward their employees by offering them additional responsibilities and more desirable assignments in the workplace. "This demonstrates confidence in their potential for growth," he said. He also suggested that employers take a proactive role with employees in this regard. "Don't assume employees know their work is valued by management. Instead, take the initiative to show them their efforts are appreciated." Robert Half International will open its Springfield branch full-time by the end of the year. It is currently open 3 days a week. Call (413) 734-7752.

The University of Massachusetts graduate computer science program was ranked "18th best in the nation" in U.S. News magazine's 1994 edition of America's Best Graduate Schools. Ranking was determined by chairs of computer science departments across the country. William Adrion, who has headed the UMass program since 1986, recently stepped down from his post to pursue research interests in software testing and analysis, and to direct the computer science department's Center for Research in Intelligent and Complex Computer Systems [CRICCS]. "We've developed a very strong program and it's good to see it getting recognition from other computer science departments. It's the highest form of praise," he said. Raising Glasses, Falling Leaves

by Yves Ferrand

Glorious New England! Warm summers drenched in green, leafy, cloth air, humid like the tropics are, followed by cool azure skies and maple trees exploding in gold and red and orange. Winter then comes to remind us that we are mortal, making life dark and dangerous, almost hopeless. Yet, when all seems lost, when we feel that the trees will always remain bare and the ground always covered, spring comes. Like flute music across a still lake, the spirit of spring draws ever nearer, until we feel it in our bones, before the first flower blooms or the first leaf uncurls. This part of the country is filled with so much beauty that every week seems to outdo the week before. What does all this have to do with a wine column, you ask?

I was saddened by the fact that last Labor Day almost all shops were open. For someone who enjoys New England, wine, good food and relaxation, I found that there were too many people working on Labor Day. They should have been hiking up on the mountain range, stopping for a little bread, cheese, and fruit, and quaffing bottles of Beaujolais. They should have been kissing their summer friends good-bye with late afternoon parties out in their gardens. Instead, most people were stuck in indoor malls selling footwear and shoving things into deep-fryers or standing next to cash registers listening to that "bleep...bleep...bleep" noise. Employers, I beg you: give us our holidays, give us time to enjoy life.

Granted, this is a wine column, but to enjoy wine you have to enjoy life, and to enjoy life you need to relax and have time off. Slow down to stop for a real lunch in a real place. Not a burger in your lap as you drive down the interstate, not a bucket of fried parts and a drink made of carbonated water and corn syrup on a plastic chair, surrounded by greasy stale air and ring-of-purgatory busboys cleaning tables!

Where I work we may have a glass of wine for lunch. This may raise the eyebrows of sullen mid-management types whose punch card glares and ferret-like eyes let you know that they are wary of such hints of enjoyment. A glass of wine will not turn you into a wild opiated lunatic, but it might, if given the proper amount of food and time, make you feel positively about having a break mid-day. Sometimes I enjoy my glass of wine in a thermos cup while I sit in a outdoor park. I know this is silly, but it has a practical side; the wine stays at the right temperature and I avoid the disdain of those "life censors," the type of sour souls who flap around all day looking for something to complain about. With a thermos bottle, a loaf of bread and thou... I can enjoy the stunning changes of season and my lunch with wine.

The season is now fall, and the outdoor spots at Paradise Pond, Child's Park and the river paths await. My preference for wine styles change with the season and the Vino Verde, Muscadet and light reds lose their allure and the rich robe of Pinot Noir and ruby-colored Merlot come gliding down the leaf-strewn path. Big weekend meals are planned and treasures from my cellar come forward to welcome the cool crisp air. As winter approaches and the skies darken I look towards indoor haunts with warm fires and great picture windows overlooking snow covered fields and icy rivers. Then, I dress in a woolen sweater, drinking big Rhone red wines and young black-fruit Cabernets, eating venison and baked sweet potatoes. There I wait for Spring, that first high note across the lake, played by Pan. With Spring I drink German Rieslings and rich-flavored Chardonnay. I spend time in my garden watching nature do what I cannot, and I am in awe.

Enjoy this show of shows in New England, and get yourself a thermos.

Regards,

Y.F.

Daddy's Girl

Peggy Shaw's one-woman show recalls growing up butch in the '50s

by Sarah Larson

In her solo performance You're Just Like Your Father, lesbian performance artist Peggy Shaw binds her breasts, wraps her hands for boxing, and clothes herself in a suit, an army uniform, and other male outfits. By the show's end, she has enacted a process that audiences can identify with on many levels: transformation into the father. "I adored my father," Shaw says. "I loved the smell of his clothes, the way he put cologne on, the way he buttoned his shirt. The thing I love about drag is the way the clothes feel. When I put these clothes on, I don't [literally] become him; I just love what it makes me into."

Although Shaw's performance draws on elements of pain, anger, and parent-child conflict, her style is compelling and immensely engaging; she manages to create a show that has been described as "hilarious" by critics, and that ultimately speaks more of love than of hate. In her art and in her teaching (she is a recurrent resident artist at Hampshire College), Shaw emphasizes the importance of making personal history vital material.

"I believe in entertaining the audience," says Shaw. "I [created] this show the way I teach my students to come up with their work — imagining and not censoring your-show has a nice feeling, you know, because it's accepting... I love my parents, they were very, very tough. I hated them at different times, but you grow up."

The risk she speaks of has struck chords with diverse audiences, from Hampshire College students and their parents (You're Just Like Your Father's premiere was at Hampshire's parents' weekend) to the patrons of La MaMa in New York to people in cities all across Europe. The theater she co-founded in New York, WOW, has seen tremendous success since its opening over a decade ago and is the only lesbian theater in the city. Another testament to Shaw's knack for entertaining and affecting audiences is that her involvement with Split Britches, her theater group, has supported her for 15 years, won several Obie awards, and taken her on international tours. Shaw's ability to meld entertainment with personal history, spectacle with universal character, accounts for this success. At one point in the one-woman show, she even does some lounge singing. "I go into the audience and sing 'To All the Girls I've Loved Before,' that Julio Iglesias song," she says with amusement that seems to reflect both ironic and genuine affection for the song. She finds that her ability to entertain on such a variety of levels excites audiences of all kinds.

"I have audiences who have children who come, over and over, because they love our shows," she says. "And it's not bad. I mean, [the shows] are risky. But they're not anything you wouldn't bring your kid to. They're not gross or anything. And they're loving."

Love is the potent force in Shaw's work, the element that unites the melancholic with the comedic, the angry with the sensual; it provides the nerve of both her solo work and her work with Split Britches. "In our group, we basically have a rule: one of our only rules is that we love our characters, because so many women characters have been unloved. Some of them are really risky characters, religious people, or characters that we might hate, but there's something about them we love. So before we go on, we say, 'We love these characters.'"

Reinventing old mores, reclaiming such swaggering products of male culture as the urbane Iglesias song, and finding comfort in her father's clothing are all manifestations of Shaw's great strength — regeneration, creating beauty out of conflict and sources of turmoil. You're Just Like Your Father celebrates this method for triumphant renewal.

Peggy Shaw will perform You're Just Like Your Father October 5 and 6 at 8 p.m. at Hampshire College's main lecture hall. Tickets are $8 general admission and $4 for students; call 582-5351 for information. ★

"The thing I love about drag is the way the clothes feel. I just love what it makes me into."

self." Childhood memories are excavated from the hazy annals of memory and considered anew, made modern without the filters of nostalgia or romantic convention. "It's a way of going down to the bottom of the pond and digging up all that shit on the bottom, all that stuff you keep way down," Shaw says. "And you dig it up and it's so powerful... I believe that everyone has their own story that's just as powerful as everyone else's. I don't believe that life has a plot, I don't think it has a plot or a murder or a rape or a war. My life is a series of pretty wild events put together somehow because I'm in the same body all the time. And that's kind of how the theater is."

The theater unites small stories as Shaw's performance unites personal vignettes, as editing film strips creates a narrative movie. In You're Just Like Your Father, Shaw creates a mosaic, a composite portrait that is at once her father and herself.

"I'm aware that there's an audience, so I have to keep it entertaining," says Shaw. Here, entertainment comes not from vulgarity or histrionics but from a more intimate source: Shaw finds entertainment in personal risk. "When I'm coming up with something, the first thing I think of is, what about this material is risky?" she says. "With this show, the risky thing is being solo. And the risky thing is binding my breasts, and doing drag. I mean, I've always done drag. For 20 years I've done my own drag, but this was a more emotional kind of melancholic drag because it has to do with my parents. So the show's kind of melancholic, and kind of accepting. The Lesbian performance artist Peggy Shaw binds her breasts, wraps her hands for boxing, and displays a homespun love of drag in her one-woman show You're Just Like Your Father.

An Emotional Wreck and a Sprawling Mess

HIS NAME IS ALIVE — KING OF SWEET (PERDITION PLASTICS)

Take a bit of Brian Eno ambiance, mid-period Pink Floyd, an angelic female voice, screeching guitars, and a warped pop sensibility. Explode these ingredients together, then patch them up with tape loops, treated instruments, and sonic fireworks that ignite out of the blue, and you sort of have the recipe for King of Sweet, a seamless and strange song cycle from the mysterious His Name Is Alive.

Beginning and ending with the sound of crickets in a field, King of Sweet is a compilation of demos from HNIA's private collection that have been sewn together into a weird concept album. It's arty to be sure, but in a playful way. Of the 15 tracks, fewer than half are actual songs; a large chunk of the album's "72 stereo minutes" are filled with noise, whether it's amplifiers feeding back, or recorded voices repeating a weird phrase over and over, or Public Enemy's "Fight the Power" being played backwards off in the distance.

The disc is spooky and unsettling, because things come out of the sonic woodwork unexpectedly. Just when a song seems to take shape, drawing the listener in, it teasingly dissolves into a haze of ultra-distorted noise or soothing keyboards. Peeking out from the ambient field are "Honey Babe, My Blue-Eyed Babe," "Meet Me By Moonlight, Alone," and "Take a Look Around You," which begins like "De Do Do Do, De Da Da Da" by the Police before veering into an alternate version of "Why People Disappear" (from the group's 1992 music puzzle Home Is In the Head). They're odd songs, with arrangements that were made to be listened to on headphones with eyes closed; many tunes have two entirely different drum or vocal tracks in each speaker, which is perfect for throwing brains off-balance.

For the squeamish, His Name Is Alive's 1993 album Mouth By Mouth is more song-oriented (and just as bizarre), but King of Sweet is an interesting experiment that works for the intrepid listener. It's a sprawling mess of intriguing ideas.

SEBADOH — BAKESALE (SUB POP)

Sebadoh no longer have to scream loudly to get their point across. The noise-fests and bellowing (largely the work of Eric Gaffney, who is no longer with the group) have been bulldozed away by the strong songwriting of Lou Barlow and Jason Lowenstein, making Bakesale the band's most cohesive disc so far — there's nothing left to get in the way of the music's emotional wallop.

Bakesale explodes open with "License to Confuse," an insistent, speaker-crackling, 100-second onslaught. "Careful" is just as powerful, making the most out of the rudimentary three-piece lineup; Lowenstein's bass work is especially excellent, taking up the melody to the song in all the right places. There are numerous other highlights, including "Skull," "Got It," "Magnet's Coil," and "Rebound," all of which are good examples of Sebadoh's knack for keeping songs memorably simple.

The simplicity of the music is one of its strong points — no weird effects or studio tomfoolery here. With just bare drums, bass, and guitar interacting over forty minutes, Bakesale almost seems like a grand confessional symphony with separate movements: the first three songs blast out of the gate, while the next three seem more interested in getting an emotional point across rather than following a strict verse-chorus pop format.

And though the 15 selections included here are straightforward, there is still something about the basic Sebadoh soundscape that pushes the songs slightly off-center. The guitars and amplifiers sound like they're clogged with grit and sand, making it seem as if the songs are emanating from a world where everything is a bit more melancholy. Bakesale is a beautiful, gigantic, emotional wreck of an album.

TVO Gets Under Birthmark's Skin

Interview conducted by Tom Hotz

Birthmark plays heavy, chunky, groove-oriented rock with a hint of Led Zeppelin and a tip of the hat to Jane's Addiction. We

We could incorporate some kind of mind-controlling frequency into the PA speakers that would convince everyone to come to our shows and give us money.

recently caught up with Birthmark (Greg Eramo on drums, Mark Wurga on bass and vocals, and Tom Sturm on guitar and vocals) and discussed their budding film career, pop music, and their choice of building material.

TVO: How'd you get together?

Greg: From the very beginning, it was me and Tom and another guy who started a band called Southgoing Zax about two years ago and that lasted about a year. Then we had a two-month space where we had no band. Mark called me and said he read our flyer and we met. We loved him and he's still stuck here in Northampton.

Tom: There were many trying times along the way. We did a couple of studio tapes as Southgoing Zax and the second one came out as Birthmark because we decided to change the name after we lost our first bass player and we heard there was a band in Michigan called Southgoing song catchy to people. There are ways to determine why this chord change sounds good and a lot of people use it as almost a er because we have open minds towards appreciation of music and we're not focused on anything except music.

TVO: If you could be in any other band in Northampton, which would it be?

Greg: [I'd be] the drummer for Ray Mason.

Mark: I'd probably be the bass player for Amy Fairchild because I really love her music and I think her band's killer.

Tom: I like the songs that Ray Mason writes and I like Chet Keefe and The Blood Oranges.

TVO: What do you have planned for the next six months?

Mark: We're actually working on a movie. It's probably going to be a fifteen-minute short film and we're going to do the soundtrack.

Greg: The whole thing is kind of ambiguous. It's called Little Dreams. The filmmaker works here at the Brewery with Mark and I. He really liked our music and he had some ideas. This summer we've been going up to his place in Hatfield and filming. We've also been sending out packages to labels and management companies and colleges.

Tom: I've been trying to think of a way to get everyone to like us. The first plan was to build an army of androids that would come to our shows and work jobs for us. Eventually the herd mentality would take over. My other idea was that we could incorporate some kind of mind-controlling frequency into the PA speakers that would convince everyone to come to our shows and give us money. We'll need a research grant to do it.

TVO: What's your favorite building material?

Tom: Adamantium. It's very strong and practically indestructible.

Greg: Beverage napkins.

Mark: Legos.★

Birthmark — bringing mystical rock from the ancient temples to you.

Zax.

TVO: How would you describe your music?

Mark: Very dramatic and mystical. We write operas.

Greg: Extremely pornographic.

Tom: It's still kind of taking shape. We're definitely loud and energetic. We're tightly focused on songs.

TVO: Would you call it pop music?

Tom: I understand pop formulas. It's really an interesting thing, what makes a science. It's hard to say — some people write really great three-chord songs and some people write really horrible songs with fifty chords in them.

TVO: What bands do you like in common?

Mark: We all meet at a three-way crossroads. I don't know, Frank Zappa, Zeppelin, the classics.

Greg: We all have influences that relate, but we also have ones that don't that you can bring into the band. We play togeth-

Wax On, Wax Off

The Next Karate Kid is chop-sick

by Jeff Allard

Though the sequels were not quite as eagerly demanded as the next Star Wars or even the next Friday the 13th, Columbia Pictures gamely tries to revive its popular (?) Karate Kid series by giving the formula a feminine (if not exactly feminist) spin. As most folks will gather from the ads, the original Kid, Ralph Macchio (who must be pushing thirty by now) is out of the picture, leaving lovable sage Miyagi (Noriyuki "Pat" Morita) to find another pubescent underdog to mold into a teen tornado. This time it's Julie (Hillary Swank) the rebellious, alienated granddaughter of an old friend of Miyagi's. Unable to get past the girl's rage over the recent death of her parents, the heartsick grandmother steps aside (so aside she disappears for the rest of the picture!) to let Miyagi try his approach. Although Julie is resentful and sulky at first, Miyagi's irresistible dime-store wisdom ("Ambition without knowledge is like a boat on dry land,") slowly begins to puncture her psychic armor. Their first real bonding session doesn't come, though, until while running away from Miyagi in a royal huff, Julie dodges an oncoming delivery car by leaping into the tiger attack pose (!). Afterwards, it's revealed that Julie's late father had taught her the basics of karate, just as his father had taught him after originally learning the art from Miyagi.

Although Miyagi frowns on Julie's earnest bids to learn how to break boards ("What did boards ever do to you?"), this wouldn't be a Karate Kid movie unless there was a free-roaming bully waiting to be taught a lesson. This time it's the ever-dependable Michael Ironside (Total Recall) as the psychotic commander of a group of keyed-up high school thugs calling themselves the Alpha Team. The Alpha Team is in charge of dispensing hard justice on the grounds of the Boston high school which Julie attends (As Ironside instructs: "If you catch a punk with a spray can, spray his eyes so he sees red!"). Even if they didn't all wear matching jackets, you could tell these brick-heads by their matching sneers. Naturally, the meanest of the bunch has his beady eyes set on Julie.

Along the way, Julie snags a more legitimate love interest in the form of Eric

Mr. Miyagi (Noriyuki "Pat" Morita) and Julie Pierce (Hillary Swank) monitor the recovery of a wounded hawk in The Next Karate Kid.

(Chris Conrad), an Alpha member who quickly falls out of goose step with his comrades. He gets into good graces with Julie by not revealing the fact she's been nursing a wounded hawk on the roof of the school. For what seems like an eternity she follows the grinning oaf around until he promises to keep the bird a secret. Around this time, the kids in the audience will be wishing they stayed home to rent Three Ninjas Kick Back. Free popcorn to anyone who can spot the big concept failure with The Next Karate Kid. Think Sheena, think Supergirl: Little boys who go to PG action films don't give a hoot about girls that kick butt, and girls don't care about action films, period. Although the film's ad line: "Who says the good guy always has to be a guy?" is a point well-taken, it won't make boys care any more about how pretty Julie looks in her prom dress and it won't make girls care about how well Julie can deliver a round-house kick.

In the end, of course, there's the inevitable Final Conflict. The butts that need to be kicked get truly kicked. Strangely though, there's a spirit of die-hard pacifism here that, while praiseworthy, negates any cathartic enjoyment. As is the wiser path, Miyagi refuses to allow himself or Julie to take any pleasure out of physically trouncing an opponent. The movie gets more excited about the moment when Miyagi takes the monks out on the town for a night of Zen bowling. It's a cute moment (as they show up the regular leaguers), but if the makers of The Next Karate Kid really wanted to take the non-violent route, they shouldn't have gotten the audience or its protagonist ready for a fight. Just call this The ABC Afterschool Kung Fu Special. ★

Film For Life

New England Film and Video Festival Comes to Town

By Joni Fraser

A former model for the "Marlboro Man" shares his experience of living with AIDS; a woman enters the body of a misogynist to see what it's like; a film crew searches a town in Morocco for traces of Jimi Hendrix; a group of over-70 handball players in Miami confront old age with laughter and resilience. These are subjects of films far from the conventional offerings at the megaplex or even the shelves of your nearby video store. Usually you have to look hard to catch such varied works, but on this Friday and Saturday Valley filmgoers will have a wonderful opportunity to view a variety of unique and vibrant films created by area filmmakers, when the New England Film and Video Festival visits Northampton.

On September 23 and 24, the NEFVF, in association with the western Massachusetts chapter of Design Industries Foundation Fighting AIDS (DIFFA), will present five programs featuring 24 of the most outstanding works from the festival's past few years. With a breadth of subject matter and approaches, there's literally something for everyone. Opening the event on Friday, September 23rd, and sounding the themes of many of the films to follow, is acclaimed filmmaker Ross McElwee's Time Indefinite. The film is, like McElwee's previous film Sherman's March, a very personal documentary of McElwee's journey through life. It begins with him at a family reunion announcing (and filming) his engagement, and ends with the birth of his son, but along the way unexpected personal events and family tragedies ensue. All the while McElwee is trying to both film life and live life at the same time, with often poignant, often humorous results. (At one point a family member in the middle of chores exasperates, "You'd be a big help if you put down the camera.") McElwee will be present at the screening and the reception that will follow the film, so you can ask him such questions as "What was it like to film your fiancée during her gynecological exam?" A Friday late show following the reception will over-five short films including The Third Day, an experimental video by Amherst artist Wendy Woodson.

A very subjective sampling from two afternoon programs on Saturday includes Shayna Maidels: Orthodox Jewish Teenage Girls, a documentary about an unusual generation gap between teenage girls in L.A. adopting the strict laws of Orthodox Judaism and their less observant parents, who wonder what kind of place they have in their daughters' lives; Dangerous When Wet, by former Northampton resident Diane Bonder, a wild and whimsical account of a young woman's first orgasm; and Papa Qu(h)erido, a thesis project of remained silent about the country's and the family's past.

The Saturday night program showcases 8 all-time festival favorites, including Castro Cowboy, a profile of Christian Haren, one of the original "Marlboro Men," who has lived with AIDS for seven years and has become a popular and innovative AIDS educator. "I don't know what keeps me alive," Haren admits at one point. "I suspect it's kids." What fuels Fast Eddie and the Boys is lots of both handball and conversation. The film, a graceful portrait of septuagenarian handball players in Miami Beach, is the work of Florentine Film co-founders Roger Sherman and Buddy Squires, and features the photography of Hampshire professor Jerome Liebling. Dance on the Wind: Portrait of a Mississippi Shaman, is an amazingly fine video on the life and work of Eno Washington, an African-American dancer and scholar whose study of African dance led to his discovery of the connections between African and African-American popular dance — "they're all offshoots from the same tree."

All Film for Life screenings are a benefit for DIFFA, which provides funds to community-based nonprofit HIV-AIDS programs, and all screenings will take place at Sage Hall on the Smith College campus in Northampton; for more ticket information, call (413) 586-8686. ★

Our Best Work Is A Cheap Copy.

Welcome back Mt. Holyoke College!

Van Gogh we're not. We're known for quick copies, color copies, custom t-shirts, laminating and binding, neat resumes, and convenient fax services at reasonable prices. Plus we're stacked to the ceiling with notebooks and binders, pads and paper, organizers, pens and markers, address books and calendars - all the things you need to spruce up your room or office and get ready for work or school. Our low prices may surprise you - on the same stuff you've seen elsewhere. The only originals you'll find here are the jokers behind the counter.

Dear Friend,

Here's your ticket to Home Theater Excitement!

Thursday, Sept. 22, factory reps. from Onkyo, Adcom, & Boston Acoustics will be at Sound & Music for seven hours of blockbuster home theater demonstrations and informative "how-to" conversation.

Come anytime after 3 pm and enjoy the demos, the refreshments, and the personal attention to all your questions. Then stick around: at 7:30 Don Truit of Onkyo, Greg Stidsen of Adcom, and Brian Fournier of Boston Acoustics will present their latest products and informative views on the home theater scene.

See and hear the latest in big screen TV, laser disc players, VCR's, Dolby Pro-Logic receivers, and THX systems. Learn what center channels, subwoofers, and surround satellites can do to enhance the system you already own.

Guests are welcome, so don't miss it!

See you there,

Bearing Witness

Another reaction to the tragedy of the AIDS epidemic takes shape in Bearing Witness, an exhibit of charcoal drawings by Boston artist Michael David at the Hampden Gallery on the University of Massachusetts campus. The drawings reflect the artist's personal experience with a friend's death from AIDS. David's works, including Pieta (shown here) are large-scale drawings which David says are not meant to be political statements, but rather "a personal, emotional response." The show runs from September 27 - October 14. For information call 545-0680.

Misplaced Musician

The Northampton Arts Council announces the premiere of Forgotten Tenor, an experimental documentary film by local filmmaker and Hampshire College professor, Abraham Ravett. Utilizing a combination of rare archival footage, family photographs, memorabilia, computer animation, and interviews, Ravett reflects the short life of one of the greatest and perhaps most unheralded jazz tenor saxophone players, Wardell Gray. Starting his career in the big bands of Earl Hines and Billy Eckstine, Wardell went on to play and record with such well known figures such as Charlie Parker, Count Basie, and Benny Goodman. Forgotten Tenor not only pays homage to Wardell Gray's accomplishments, but acts as a meditation on time, memory, and the evolving histories of American Black Classical Music.

Forgotten Tenor will be shown Saturday, October 1 in Wright Hall on the Smith College Campus, October 2 in Stern Auditorium at Amherst College, and on October 8 in Franklin Patterson at Hampshire College. All showings start at 7:30 p.m. and admission is free.

Come Meet Old Turtle as She Rolls Across Country To Collect Messages of World Peace

SATURDAY, OCT. 1, 2-4 pm
Activities for Children & Adults
at the Bookshop

Old Turtle, a converted Volkswagen Beetle, is travelling the country, visiting bookstores to play host to gatherings for peace as part of a 7-month, 50 state tour. Old Turtle also is the heroine of Douglas Wood's fable of peace and environmental awareness titled, appropriately enough, Old Turtle.

At each stop Old Turtle takes part in activities that encourage children and adults to write their visions of peace for the leaders of the world. As the tour reaches its destination, Old Turtle hopes to have collected 1 million messages of peace to deliver to members of the United Nations in time for the 50th anniversary of the UN this fall. We hope you will join us for this memorable gathering of peace and fun for the whole family.

Call Lisa Ganci, our Childrens' Dept. Manager for information on how to present an Old Turtle storytelling or other activity to your school, church or organization.

You Must Remember This... as Time Goes By

All people—even young adults, adolescents, and children—forget things. The names of new acquaintances. Possessions. Phone calls they meant to make. When this happens, they and their elders may joke about “selective memory.” But for the older adult, the very same lapses provoke intense anxiety.

If you're over 45, you've no doubt experienced annoying delays in recall. You can't for the life of you remember the name of your high-school chemistry teacher, but later the name “Mrs. McCoy” floats into your consciousness. Or maybe it never surfaces. Or you find yourself standing in the middle of the kitchen and can't recall what you came there for.

“Am I losing it?” you wonder. “Is this going to get worse?”

One word that definitely is on the tip of every tongue these days is “Alzheimer's.” This disease is better understood and more readily identified by doctors today, even though it remains incurable. But only a small percentage (anywhere from 5 to 10%) of people over 65 suffer from Alzheimer's disease. For the majority of health people, some degree of memory loss, especially after 65, is a normal part of aging.

Yet even as you search everywhere for your car keys, do remember this: many people can and do retain a very high level of mental functioning as they grow older. There's no uniform pattern of age-related changes in mental abilities for adults—it's a very individual matter. Declines, when they do occur, happen gradually over many years. But as Dr. K. Warner Schaie of Penn State University puts it, “We can teach an old dog new tricks.” Indeed, his research has shown that people in their seventies and eighties are quite capable of learning and can even reverse mental declines.

ATTITUDE AND SELF-AWARENESS

As part of the ongoing Seattle Longitudinal Study of Aging, Dr. Schaie tested a group of over 800 people whose mean age was 68 initially (the range was 25 to 95). He found that many of them were sharper than they thought. Though verbal abilities generally remained stable into the mid-seventies, many people were overly pessimistic about their verbal abilities by the time they were tested again seven years later. Women also tended to underestimate their ability to visualize and to deal with objects in space. Dr. Schaie emphasized that some of this is reinforced by cultural stereotypes that people buy into. It helps just to know that you can expect to retain your verbal abilities and your sense of spatial orientation.

Being realistic about your abilities and assessing your strengths accurately can help.

Self-aware people are able to adapt more readily. Staying aware could include anything from getting a check-up (to rule out any physical causes of forgetfulness) to simply forming the habits of writing things down.

HOW THEY DO IT

What about the happy majority who maintain high levels of functioning into their seventies and eighties? The Seattle Longitudinal Study, underwritten by the National Institute on Aging, has followed 5,000 people, some for as long as 35 years. A summary of findings that recently appeared in American Psychologist cited some predisposing factors: good health, good education backgrounds, keen interests, positive attitudes, and job satisfaction—as well as living with a smart spouse! Yet even if you have not led a charmed life and don't fit into this profile, there's plenty you can do to keep your confidence level up and your mind supple as you grow older:

Know your health status. Untreated high blood pressure, for example, can mildly impair memory and lengthen recall time. If you have high blood pressure, this is one of many reasons to treat it and keep it under control.

Be patient with yourself if your short-term recall slows down, or if it takes you longer to rummage through your memory bank and come up with the fact you want. All this is perfectly natural and no big deal. The average 20-year-old has a vocabulary of 20,000 words; the average 60-year-old, 40,000. That's one reason it takes longer to do the sorting. The process of retrieval may slow down, but age usually enhances “intelligence” and may even result in “wisdom,” in part because our store of information has grown so much.

Give yourself credit for all you do remember. Prospective memory—remembering to keep a dentist's appointment for next week, for example—usually does not decline with age. Compare yourself with young adults you know: are you really so much more forgetful than they?

Stay active mentally. Pursue old interests and cultivate new ones. Play Scrabble or bridge, work on puzzles. Read the newspaper. Take a course in some subject that interests you, or learn a craft or skill. All these are good exercises for improving memory and maintaining intellectual function.

Be active. While there's no proof that physical fitness goes along with intellectual fitness, regular exercise confers a sense of well-being and may help control or ward off health problems. ★

Emotional Fitness

by Tom Raymond, MSW

Dear Tom,

I've been dating a woman who lives 100 miles away for over eight months now. Our schedules are such that we have been able to see each other three or four days a week but the commute is getting pretty tiring. I wish she lived in my neighborhood, but I'm afraid of what might happen if she moves. If I ask her to come I'll feel responsible if things don't work out and she's uprooted her life for me. I've considered moving there but I love my home too much to go.

What should I do?

— Travelin' Man

Talk to her! If she's as invested in the relationship as you are, similar thoughts must be crossing her mind.

The first step is to lay to rest the notion that you'd be responsible for her if she agreed to move. In a relationship, each partner is only responsible for what they say and do. If you mislead her by overstating your affection, or by implying more of a commitment than you're actually willing to make, then you deserve to be tarred and feathered. But if you make an honest attempt to convey your feelings, you're not to blame if the move backfires.

Furthermore, if the relationship continues, this will not be the last time you'll find yourselves weighing her desires against your own. Intimacy demands that we declare our preferences, listen to our partner's response, and then negotiate.

One approach you might find useful is to separate your needs from your wants. You need to eat, but you want a pizza. You need to sleep, but you want a feather pillow. In successful relationships, wants are negotiable; needs are not. The hard part is figuring out which is which. Do you need to be with her but want to stay where you are, or do you want to be with her and need to stay where you are?

If this doesn't help, try putting the "travel-or-move" question aside for a while. Instead, focus on the here and now. What's going well and what's not?

A successful relationship is worth a couple of hundred miles a week. It may also be worth the risk of reducing that distance.

Dear Tom,

I am a single bachelor with a satisfying career. Recently I found myself powerfully attracted to a woman who works for me. I know what they say about sex in the work place but I don't think I can control myself much longer. Am I bad?

— Guilty Guy

I know what they say about sex in the workplace but that's not what they do.

Save your guilt. You're her boss, not her therapist. Besides, if you tell yourself you're bad and that you must not act, odds are you'll cave in before the week is out.

But there is a right way to go about it. First, don't make your move on company time or on company turf. Second, if your overture is rejected, simply go back to business as usual. Third, if it is accepted, do your best to keep your professional relationship professional.

Down the road you may need to discuss changes in how you work together, depending on the nature of your jobs. However, don't forget that the vast majority of romantic relationships end. Burning bridges is for advancing armies. Would-be lovers should retain the option of an orderly retreat.

As for affairs, they have been with us since the first couple said "I do" and promised "I won't."

Dear Tom,

I have a three-year-old girl who doesn't want to sleep in her bed anymore because of a bad dream. Is this something I should have checked out?

— Puzzled Parent

Chances are this is your normal gremlin-under-the-bed stuff. Three-year-olds are old enough to talk about dreams, but not old enough to separate them from their waking world. If you can get a handle on what spooked her, assure her that you can shoo it away. If that doesn't do the trick, plug in a night light or move her bed. (Some kids will even sleep on the floor until they reassure themselves that the dream is not coming back.)

If the nightmares persist, consult your pediatrician. They can check for any physical problems or refer you to a child and adolescent therapist who can help devise other strategies and explore possible sources of tension in your child's life.

One Person's Monkfish is another one's Lobster.

Not long ago this fish was tossed over board when caught. Perhaps it was its bizarre appearance. But now everyone from Julia Child to chef Jim Galileo from the Oceana restaurant in New York are singing its culinary praises.

Monkfish is low in *cholesterol and fat. Its firm flesh and mild to slightly sweet flavor makes for the common comparison to lobster. You'll want to keep fresh Monkfish fish as close to 32°F as possible, and stored covered so the fish does not dry out. Although there are many ways to cook Monkfish, here is one of our suggestions.

Lead Stories

Desmond Morris's latest documentary, "The Human Animal: The Biology of Love," now on TV in England, will appear on U.S. cable TV in January and picture a human orgasm — from inside the vagina. A tiny camera, similar to those used for exploration of the colon, was placed inside Wendy Duffield, 31, and another was strapped onto her husband's penis. The couple reportedly had sex about 60 times to assure sufficient footage.

In June, the National Gallery of Art in Washington, D.C., featured a show on "minimalism," in which sometimes quite ordinary objects are offered as art. Included, for example, was a wrapped package, in brown paper and string, entitled "Package," by Christo. According to The Washington Post, when gallery technician Glenn Perry was installing some of the exhibits with the aid of his tool cart, "several patrons and critics" gathered around the cart and studied it, as if it were an exhibit, before Perry finished his work and rolled the cart away.

SCHMES

Texas A&M officials were considering charges in July that chemistry professor John Bockris used unorthodox scientific methods, and improperly circumvented school funding procedures, for his work in which he claims gold can be manufactured from other substances. In December, Bockris expressed surprise at the charges, reminding a campus newspaper reporter that he is a professor and saying, "What professor would be doing bogus work?"

Delaware prison officials decided in July to allow condemned murderer Nelson Shelton to undergo a kidney removal at public expense so that he can donate the organ to his mother. The state initially refused to pay but relented when Shelton played his trump card: He threatened to use all of his legal rights to appeal his sentence, which would cost the state hundreds of thousands of dollars.

In June, South Charleston, W. Va., inmate Robert Dale Shepard, in jail on robbery charges, escaped from a recreation yard by braiding dental floss into a rope that he used to scale a fence. To prevent such occurrences, the state of Maine prohibits inmates from having dental floss, but in July, Portland inmate Michael Tuck, 31, filed a lawsuit against the state, claiming that the policy hinders his ability to fight tooth decay.

In February a federal court in California dismissed the complaint of Jogeza Kakar Khan against the director of the FBI and about two dozen other defendants for harassing him. The other defendants included President Bush, "the Queen of England," French President Mitterrand, the San Francisco Chronicle, some college professors, several street gangs in Hong Kong, "the drug cartel," H. Ross Perot, Paul Newman, Kirk Douglas, Frank Sinatra, Dennis Hopper, Phil Donahue, "the founders of Israel," Oliver North, and a "humanoid alien extraterrestrial leader speaking Greek."

In June, police in Deventer, Netherlands, arrested six women and a man they said had been robbing local supermarkets. The women would enter the market and disrobe down to their underpants to create a distraction, while the man walked into the manager's office and grabbed money.

In June, Michael Frazier, the "lifestyle" editor of the daily newspaper in Oak Ridge, Tenn., was charged with attempted murder of the husband of a woman he had written about. According to police reports, Frazier and Lisa Whedbee began an affair shortly after he interviewed her. In a plot to kill John Whedbee, Frazier was to pose as a robber-intruder and stab John while Lisa stood by with a baseball bat and pretended to defend John. According to John, Frazier seemed tentative, causing Lisa to break character and yell to Frazier, "You've got to do it, just do it now."

In July, Mollie Brusstar, 48, was convicted of two counts of embezzlement from the Catholic Diocese of Arlington, Va., where she had been employed in administration. According to the prosecutor, Brusstar put imaginary employees on the rolls and issued their paychecks to herself. She and a sister went to Utah, and, posing as nuns, used the money to obtain dental work and cosmetic abdomen-reduction surgery. Brusstar's defense was that a monsignor had approved everything, but he was unavailable to testify, having committed suicide in the interim after being accused of molesting a parishioner.

FEUDS

In August, to end a feud in Concordia Sagittaria, Italy, a Judge ordered Maria Bruna Bortolussi to keep Pier talking blackbird away from neighbor Norina Miorin, after Miorin testified that Bortolussi had taught the bird to say, in Italian, "Norina, I'm going to kill you." The two were fussing over a garden.

In Minot, N.D., in June, a woman ran into a police station asking for protection from her husband, who was chasing her. She was told to be seated in the waiting area, but before police could get to her case, they found the couple outside in the parking lot facing off, with each pointing a chainsaw at the other.

CRIES FOR HELP

In May, a Denver judge sentenced Oliver Thomas Oster, 77, to serve 12 months in prison for four attempted bank robberies. Oster, who was said to resemble the near-sighted cartoon character Mr. Magoo and who is unable to walk, attempted the robberies from a car at the banks' drive-in windows and used a gun so rusted that the cylinder wouldn't turn, which was irrelevant, said his lawyer, because Oster lacked the physical strength necessary to pull the trigger, anyway.

LEAST COMPETENT CRIMINALS

Last fall, in Memphis, Tenn., a Loomis Armored Truck guard was robbed by two men just as he was about to enter a supermarket to make a pickup. The gunmen fled with the large bag the guard was carrying, which, since the guard was entering the store at the time, was merely a bag containing other empty money bags.

In November, in St. Joseph, Mo., Michael Gene McCrary, 37, was charged with attempted robbery of a barber shop. He walked in, reportedly slightly inebriated, pretending to have a gun in his pocket, and said to barber Fred Robertson, "Set 'em up." When Robertson requested clarification, McCrary replied, "You know what I mean." A customer walked outside and summoned police.

I DON'T THINK SO

In a St. John's, Newfoundland, courtroom in August, George Clarke denied that the bruises and cuts on his girlfriend's body were the result of domestic assault. He said the back bruises occurred one night when Clarke was suicidal. He said he tied a noose ineptly to an overhead pipe and ultimately fell on top of her when she tried to stop him. The bruises and cuts on her arm came because he is forced to hold her arms tightly during sex because, he said, "Your Honor, I only got a small penis on me."

COULDN'T POSSIBLY BE TRUE

In Baton Rouge, La., in June, minutes after funeral services for a 25-year-old man ended, his body caught fire inside the closed coffin, causing smoke to come shooting out of the cracks. Investigators said embalming fluids spontaneously combusted.

In Kissimmee, Fla., in May, William Nelson was shot twice at point-blank range by a man with a .30-caliber snub-nose revolver. One shot went through his shoulder and exited his back; the other bullet hit Nelson "square in the forehead and just stopped," said police officer Jim Lakey, leaving as Nelson's major problem only that his "ears were ringing."

The Consumer Product Safety Commission's May report on sports injuries said 1,455 people were sent to emergency rooms in 1992 with injuries from playing ping-pong.

Daniel Czubko, 32, went on the lam in late July when police in Bakersfield, Calif., sought him on charges that he had stalked his estranged wife. According to police, Czubka secretly moved into a 2 1/2-foot-high crawl space underneath the floor of Mrs. Csubko's new home on about July 23 and stayed for a week, listening to her activities, then leaving briefly to harass her on the phone by eerily describing what she was wearing and what she had been doing.

In a story on Elvis Week '94 in August in Memphis, The Commercial Appeal newspaper reported its selections as the two most bizarre Elvis collectors' memorabilia, both of which belong to Joni Mabe of Athens, Ga. One is a toenail she claims was Elvis's, picked out of a carpet in the Jungle Room during her 1963 visit to Graceland; the other is a wart that was removed from Elvis's right wrist in 1957. She said she purchased the wart, encased in formaldehyde, from the operating surgeon's estate in 1990.

William Powell, 35, was convicted of assault in Detroit in June after a court found that he intentionally pulled his pregnant, 33-year-old girlfriend part way through the window of his van as he sped through the neighborhood, rammed her body against a telephone pole, and kicked her after he stopped the van. The woman, who lost the baby as well as an arm and a leg in the incident, testified in support of Powell, saying that the incident was her fault.

Police in Mendota Heights, Minn., filed armed robbery charges against John P. Wuchko, 20, in July. According to police, Wuchko left no fingerprints at the scene because he wore surgical gloves, but they recovered one of the gloves nearby and found Wuchko's fingerprint on the inside of one of the fingers.

PEOPLE IN THE WRONG PLACE AT THE WRONG TIME

In Las Vegas, Nev., four undocumented aliens were deported to Mexico in July after being turned in by the customer for whom they were installing carpet. The customer was Arthur Strapp, head of the local office of the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS). Said Strapp, "Out of 900,000 people in Las Vegas they picked my house." And in March, a Haitian woman who had just landed illegally in St. Croix, the Virgin Islands, was arrested when she hailed what she thought was a taxicab but which turned out to be an official INS car.

In May, a gang of bandits burst into a bakery in Rio de Janeiro at precisely the time that it was being robbed by another gang. The first gang had just taken a cash box, containing about $45, which the second gang then demanded at gunpoint. A hail of gunfire erupted, and the first gang

One of the features of DBA that has become popular with employers is their Temp-to-Hire program. As Whitney explains, "it lets employers see an individual on the job before making a decision to hire them. And, if it's a good fit, that person can be hired by the company as a permanent, full-time employee." Such was the case with one of DBA's clients, who credited Hicks and Whitney personally for her employment success. "Thank you for all that you did by getting me a permanent position at Hillside Plastics," she wrote to them. "Without you people from DBA, I would not be where I am today."

DBA's Other Beneficiaries

The benefits of DBA are beneficial not just to business employers and clients, but also to individuals with disabilities who rely on CE's services. For example, DBA recently contributed $10,000 to CE's Employment and Training Division; specifically, to the Athol/Orange Cleaning and Construction Crew for the purchase of a van. With contracts ranging from painting to sheet-rocking throughout the Franklin, Hampshire, Hampden and North Quabbin areas, the crew was in need of their own transportation.

Staffed by people with disabilities, the Construction Crew is headed by Employment Coordinator Earl Lincoln, who has a General Contractor's license and over 25 years of experience. Lincoln, his chief assistant Gary Beaulieu, and the other crew members have been remodeling a building in Holyoke which will likely serve as rental space for new businesses. With funding assistance provided by Fleet Bank, the project has been running successfully since April and is serving a variety of needs for the crew members.

One worker, afflicted with a manic-depressive disorder, described why the Construction Crew is important to him. "I have my disability and I don't have much money. I have a wife, I have an apartment and I have to pay my bills. The money I receive through this job helps to ease the burden a little better."

"I like the flexibility of the hours," says Darryl, another crew member. "I have a family and I go to school, but thanks to [the Construction Crew] I'm able to work as well."

"I think that every woman should work on an all-male construction crew to find out what it's really like," quips Sue, the lone female of the group. From the back seat of the van, she afterwards adds that "the people on the crew are really nice. They treat me just like one of the equals and I really appreciate it."

Looking Towards the Future

Economic development is a hot topic for CE and DBA these days. DBA has recently begun a second for-profit business called Dependable Cleaning Service, specializing in commercial cleaning. Plans are currently underway for a Small Business and Entrepreneur Center, a joint venture of DBA and CE that would directly assist people with disabilities by providing small business advising and possibly a revolving business loan fund. Joseph Campbell, EdD, President of CE, says that the project will be launched during this fiscal year.

In explaining the philosophies underlying this entrepreneurial center, Campbell says that the employment opportunities which are generally available for people with disabilities are limited. The jobs tend to be low-paying and under-stimulating. "They're being processed in a vocational system that figures they should be in jobs," he says, "[when probably] 20 percent of the disability population is entrepreneurial; these people don't want to be somebody else's employee. We must address this whole issue of economic development for people with disabilities."

Ultimately, DBA and other for-profit businesses will continue to play a key role in CE's future services to people with disabilities, in addition to servicing their own clients. As Campbell notes, it is their profits that generate the necessary monies and the freedom to experiment with possibilities beyond the restrictions of state funding. "Quite frankly, we could never take this innovative approach [to human services] if it wasn't for private money," says Campbell. "The for-profit enterprises are providing the capital, the resources, and the structures in which these people can be helped."

Community Enterprises Inc. and Dependable Business Alternatives are located at 441 Pleasant Street in Northampton. For information call (413) 584-7460 (V/TTY). ★

escaped with the money.

In January and February, respectively, inmates escaping from prisons in Lancaster, Calif., and Immokalee, Fla., by hiding in garbage trucks, failed to get out of the trucks before they were compacted into bales of trash. The California man survived, but the Florida man, who was serving a life sentence for kidnapping was found dead, badly mangled, in a landfill, where the truck had deposited him.

CRIES FOR HELP

Last fall, the California Bar Association finally disciplined Berkeley, Calif., Attorney Morgan Doyle for a string of incidents dating back eight years. Among them, according to the bar association: In 1985, he fired a shotgun from the roof of his apartment building to celebrate what he called the exploration of the West and the arrival of a battleship in the San Francisco harbor; and in 1991, after the owner of a restaurant refused to yield to Doyle's repeated, inexplicable requests for free croissants, Doyle threw food around the room and threatened the man and his wife. The bar association, noting that none of the incidents involved "moral turpitude," suspended Doyle for 30 days.

Least Competent Criminal

Danny Kelley, 17, was charged again in August for burglarizing a home near San Antonio, Texas. Last year, the 400-pound Kelley was arrested for another home burglary, during which he had also raided the refrigerator, after police traced a trail of discarded ice cream wrappers from that house to Kelley's in the same neighborhood. ★ one gay man who had tried for thirteen years to become a father. He had tried all these different ways and finally hooked up with a woman, a lesbian. He was single at the time and she was in a relationship with someone who didn't want kids. They did basically what they describe as a courtship. Subsequently, he became involved with this man and now they're these two couples and at the center is this gay man and lesbian who have developed a very intimate relationship around parenting. It's a family. They don't all live together but they function as a family and the kid goes back and forth. I think they just open up so much in terms of what a family might be. Also, along gender lines, it's just fascinating what happens when two men or two women have to work out parenting arrangements without being able to fall back on gender stereotypes about who's going to do what and what kinds of relationships we're going to have with children. They're really shaking up the definitions and expectations, that's why I hope the book is widely read by not just gay men and lesbians because the culture really needs some of these models.

There's only one Original.

For over a quarter century, we've been first to introduce the most innovative, brilliant jewelry designs and offer them at the best value. We're proud of our leadership role and thankful to all our customers who rely on us for the extraordinary jewelry that mark some of the most beautiful moments in life. For customer service that goes well beyond the sale and an overall jewelry-buying experience that's sincere—rely on the area's original. Sutter's since 1968.
